There are cases when it is useful to explicitly force the compiler to use immediates instead of literals: #define ONE + 1 const int two = ONE; Of course I can make it a char but I'm looking for a built-in way. I'm asking for GCC, Clang and the like. A: No. The only "built-in way" to do that would be to #define an integer constant, and since macros allow for variable length arguments, that means that you'd have to write something like: #define ONE + 1L And even then, there's no guarantee that this is going to do what you want; the compiler could expand it to something even worse (e.g. a long int containing the source literal value) or even the same thing. A: There is no way to do that. But maybe you can ask the compiler for what it would do, by enabling more optimizations and then using the -S option. 1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to the field of semiconductor device manufacturing and, more particularly, to a method and apparatus for planarizing a wafer surface. 2. Description of the Related Art The following descriptions and examples are not admitted to be prior art by virtue of their inclusion within this section. In the manufacture of semiconductor devices, the use of chemical mechanical polishing (CMP) is becoming more prevalent as an important process in the preparation of semiconductor wafers for fabrication of integrated circuits. In general, CMP involves holding and rubbing a semiconductor wafer in a slurry against a moving surface such as the surface of a planar pad used in conjunction with a CMP apparatus. Generally, the slurry is a basic mixture of chemicals and abrasive materials that aids in the rate of polishing and planarization. U.S. Pat. No. 5, aa67ecbc25
